I'am interested in the printed quality of imagery

“Hang in there” is the title of the first solo show by Manor Grunewald at A+B gallery in Brescia (IT) where will be presented a new series of paintings and sculptures and the gallery space will be transformed in poliedric installation.

Manor Grunewald's experimental work (painting, sculpture, installation and prints) questions the reproducibility of images and the potential errors generated by their duplication. His work is inscribed in our digital age, saturated with media and images, where abstract painting can establish a new material presence. Mostly using familiar images, either reproduced by being photocopied so many times they end up obscured or vanished through a process of fading duplication, Grunewald breaks the boundaries between popular images and abstraction.

In Manor Grunewald practice found footage functions more as buckets and tubes of paint in the studio. It is a tool to get further on and see what happens after different functions reproductions of it by a copy machine in black and white. The interest of the artist is on the transformation of the subject and in the creation of a composition, as a collage, during the process of reproduction with the copy machine. These last images printed are assembled with others office tool, such as metal shelves and office design dividers. Everything now is fixed, but potentially archived for a new process transformation.
